About the programme

Current Development in Cybersecurity (SCPD18071101)

Course outline

As the world is getting ever more interconnected, cybersecurity is no longer a technical issue handled within a corner of the IT department. Many of such issues are already debated intensely in the boardrooms. In fact, protecting the cyber space is no longer a corporate issue but a national agenda as most of the population and different devices are connected to the Internet. As a result, much of the required cybersecurity knowledge is still catching up to the technological development in this area.

In this seminar, the speaker will provide a business and technical overview of the latest cybersecurity development.

After joining this seminar, participants will gain knowledge about:

- Current development in cybersecurity
- Key regulations of cybersecurity in Hong Kong
- Various types of cyber attacks and the associated controls and counters
- Practical and effective approach to cybersecurity from personal and corporate perspective

What Every Business Should Know about Data Privacy (SCPD18071301)

Course outline

Whether we like it or not, more and more data, personal or otherwise, is being collected on the Internet. As the boundary between legitimate sharing of information and outright invasion of privacy becomes ever more blurry, it is important for management to take control of this aspect of their business. As long as you collect customer information, you are at risk of mishandling such data. With many regulations developing across the globe, data privacy is no longer an agenda to be dealt with only by big corporations but many small and medium enterprises as well.

In this seminar, the speaker will provide a business and technical overview of the latest data privacy development.

This seminar will share:

- Current development in data privacy
- Key regulations of data privacy in Hong Kong and across the globe
- Practical and effective approach to data privacy from personal and corporate perspective
