About the programme

Motivating Staff by Creating a Value Edge (re-run) (WSHP19012101)

Workshop outline

We are currently facing the emergence of the millennial generation that possesses a very different social value system from their previous generation. Nevertheless, there are ways to find out what some of these differences are. Aligning the organizational and personal values, and motivating staff by leveraging on their personal values are effective ways of lowering staff turnover and improving team morale.

This workshop will cover:

- Why motivation is critical to the success of an organization
- Emergence of the Millennial generation and their differences in social value system
- Challenges in leading a multi-generation team
- Ways to discover personal values amongst team members
- How to motivate staff of different generations and create a value edge
- Create policies that best motivate staff

After joining the workshop, the participants will be able to:

- Learn about the importance of motivation
- Appreciate the differences in social value systems amongst staff of different generations
- Know about ways to discover personal values amongst team members
- Acquire knowledge and skills to motivate staff of different generations
- Apply these knowledge and skills learned in workplace
