

China's New Cyber Security Law - Overview and implications

About the topic

The Standing Committee of the National People's Congress passed the Cyber Security Law in November last year, and this law will come into effect from 1 June this year. The new law contains a number of significant provisions which could have a far-reaching impact on companies operating in China. For example, the requirements to store data in China and undergo security reviews, if applicable, could pose a threat to a company's intellectual property and security, while a company's business licence could be revoked if it stores or provides network data overseas without complying with the requisite requirements.

In this seminar, the speakers will give you an overview of the law, and how it will affect forensic accountants/ accountants.
